International Journal of Public Information Systems

CALL FOR PAPERS

The editor-in-chief of IJPIS, Bo Sundgren[1], invites submissions for a special issue of the journal with the theme:-

Public Sector Reporting Systems: A Global Challenge

The financial market turmoil of 2008 has challenged Public Sector (Governmental) reporting agencies as well as the for-profit sector. Many states are struggling to finance existing services to citizens due to the erosion of tax bases. States are searching for ways to continue services by using creative financing techniques. The rising unemployment numbers only exacerbate the problem. The pressure to maintain performance indicators is a challenge and some solutions present reporting problems for state agencies and auditors. The International Public Sector Accounting Standards Board has issued an exposure draft for a new conceptual framework system for external financial reporting. Internal Controls for external financial reporting are under pressure.

The guest editor for this special edition will be Dr Ashley Burrowes, School of Business, Woodbury University, Burbank, CA 91510, USA

Papers should be submitted on or before September 30th 2009 to Dr Bo Sundgren, Editor in Chief at:-

[1] "Public information systems are information systems available for public use. There are public information systems both in the public sector and in the private sector, and both citizens and businesses may be users of such systems. Public information systems are analyzed from several perspectives as regards users and usages, data contents, and technical, organizational, and legal aspects. Proposals concerning future research in this truly interdisciplinary and application-oriented research area are encouraged". (Adapted from IJPIS, Vol. 1, pp. 81-99).
